ACI- The Financial Markets Association, Europe on the Financial Tax Transaction

Following a General European Meeting in Dubai on March 21, ACI-Europe members reaffirm the dangers of the implementation of a Tax levied on each transaction as is planned by the EC.

Member states in Europe are concerned by the fact that such a tax would alter the level playing field between countries, unless it is applied globally, and therefore increase fiscal arbitrage opportunities between countries rather than move towards a European harmonisation.

Furthermore, the tax would also be transferred to end-users as it would oblige market-makers to increase their bid-offer spreads in order to pay for the tax percentage.

This would mainly target corporate, pension funds and other hedging clients who do not enter into such transaction for speculative, but for hedging purposes.

ACI Europe insists that other alternatives have to be found, that maintain the level playing field between countries, and that do not hit the end-user of the financial product.
